

FREE!

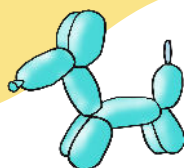

HAPPY NEWS

OUTER SPACE

Art exhibition in space!?

A famous artist has launched his first art exhibition in space! The artist, called Whatshisname, showcases a number of pieces including balloon dog sculptures in outer space. He said: "This is my very first solo exhibition and ironically, no one, myself included, can attend!" Now that's out of this world!

UK

Go on a worm hunt to help scientists study soil

A new study aims to create a worm map of the UK. The study, run by the Soil Association, will look at the health of our soil and the worms living in it. People are being invited to help out by recording the sizes and varieties of worms they find. Scientists say they can tell how healthy soil is just by looking at the worms - the more worms, the healthier the soil! Get involved by going to soilassociation.org/worm-hunt

Your weekly round up of feel-good news from around the world!

USA

Oldest orca whale in captivity to be freed

An orca who has been in captivity for over 50 years is to be released. Tokitae, who currently lives at the Miami Seaquarium, will be released back into the sea within the next two years. Tokitae was taken from the ocean in 1970 when she was just four years old. She is now 57.

UAE

Meet the world's youngest author, age 4

Do you dream of one day writing a book? Well, meet the kid who did just that - at four years old! Saeed Rashed from Abu Dhabi has become the world's youngest author. His book, The Elephant Saeed and The Bear has sold over 1,000 copies.

INTERNATIONAL

Half of kids say their goal in life is to be happy

A study of 5,000 families from 10 countries, including the UK, has revealed what many children think across the globe. Half of children said their goal in life is to be happy, whilst a third said it's to have a good education. 67% of children said they felt happy about the future. What are you looking forward to about the future?

