

FREE!

HAPPY NEWS

USA

Revealed: World's first colour changing car

In the future if you're ever stuck on what colour car to buy, you might be able to buy them all! BMW has revealed the world's first colour changing car - which can switch between 32 different colours in a matter of seconds. The chameleon-like car, called the i Vision Dee, uses special electronic ink technology on the body panels. There are no plans for the car to be made available just yet.

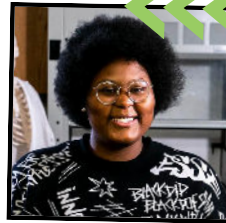

ENGLAND

Gull-away! Zoo hiring people to dress up as birds

Blackpool Zoo has posted a new job advert for 'seagull Deterrents,' asking people to dress up in inflatable bird costumes to scare away seagulls. The nuisance seagulls steal food from visitors and animals. The advert says the ideal candidate must be 'comfortable wearing a bird costume!'

Your weekly round up of feel-good news from around the world!

SOUTH AFRICA

Baby rhino saved by anti-poaching dog

Due to their excellent sense of smell, dogs are a highly effective part of anti-poaching units. In KwaZulu-Natal, South Africa, an anti-poaching dog named Dan, saved the life of an 18 month old rhino calf. The calf was caught in a snare - a trap poachers use - but Dan spotted her in distress and alerted his handlers. The rhino, named Viola Davis - after the Hollywood actress - was rescued and reunited with her mother.

TEENS

USA

Teenager reinvents surgical sutures, now she's a CEO

At just 17 years old, Dasia Taylor from Iowa, USA, invented a surgical suture (otherwise known as a stitch) that could detect if a wound was infected. Last month, USA Today named her Woman of the Year. Now 19, Dasia is the founder and CEO of VarigateHealth, a medical device company. She says: "You never know what you can do until you try."

UK

New map lets you see across the sea

If you've ever stood on a beach in and wondered what country you are facing, an incredible new interactive map will tell you! The map, by Esri UK, plots the 37 countries you would reach if you travelled in a straight line from almost 2000 coastal locations in the UK. Did you know for example, that from south Wales you could sail straight to Brazil?

